Bright Holidays help lift spirits

In early November, the GL National Honor Society members teamed up to bring a more cheerful mood in the holiday season for families in need. The Bright holidays event was composed of students gathering clothing items for local families.

Junior Lauren Tucker explained the event was organized by starting with the list of families.

"I shopped for the families with a partner," Tucker said. "My first stop when I received the list was to find the first item on the list in the store."

Tucker said that shopping for families in need made him feel good as well.

"It also made me feel fortunate that I can afford things like clothes," Tucker said. "I think it made the families feel good because it showed that they are cared about."

Additionally, members like junior Ella Laurens were given the task to pick out clothing items for a family, and when they completed that families list, they were given a new one.

Ella Laurens said she also enjoyed working Bright Holidays.

"I personally liked to stay organized when shopping, so I went to certain sections of the store first," Laurens said.

Laurens said she had to push her shopping skills.

"I had to shop fast because there were a lot of families, and we needed to be able to shop for all the families in little time," Laurens said.

What legacy do you hope to leave for incoming National Honors Society members?

"I hope everyone sees the good in volunteer work throughout the years. I also hope that people open up and go out of their comfort zone to find different ways to help their community."

Items Going Fast

With the help from teachers writing recommendations for a spot in the school store, senior Nick Bianchetti (1) became a serious candidate for the position. By completing required business classes, he was able to participate in selling of clothing, ordering new inventory and making bank runs. "In my down time in the school store, I clean up and make sure everything looks nice. Also we make sure inventory is up to date," Bianchetti said.

As her role as store manager, junior Sydney Blinn (2) participates in the store by taking care of the accounting and reports, creating designs for new inventory and helping out her customers. Whether that is with ringing them up for a slushy or a keepsake from the shop. "Everyday is different with how [many] slushies we sell. There's certain people that come and get them regularly, but I'd say we sell an average of five to seven slushies per day," Blinn said.

With the need of an intern to help promote sports, athletic director Karen Furlong and senior Jack Blesch (3) team up in hopes of getting their products out to the Gull Lake community. Working for the Athletic Department, he does Game Day promotions, posted on Twitter and Instagram. "[After] I do my work for Mrs. Furlong, I help the store with inventory and come up with new products and sale ideas," Blesch said.
