

Spartan Spotlight

Rising Talent

Sophomore Quinn McCune's passion for shooting sports photography

(Courtesy Photo: Quinn McCune)

A capturing of moments, emotions, and stories through the lens of a camera, using lighting, composition, and technical skills to create visually compelling images, bringing a vision to life. That is the job of a photographer. This photographer focuses his work on shooting our very own athletics teams and portraits.

Sophomore Quinn McCune started his passion for photography about a year ago. He first used his mom's little camera taking pictures of his friends, and his passion and skill grew. Now he has his own Instagram account and posts his photos, and takes requests to take photos at sporting events, but like everyone he has a favorite.

"I really like shooting basketball games because I'm really close to the action and everybody is close together," Quinn said.

Basketball is one of the many sports he shoots. He may be a beginner, but his passion for capturing moments is undeniable.

"I'm still a beginner still learning about photography, but my advice would be when you are shooting, stay low on the ground," Quinn said.

Quinn will pursue his passion for photography over the next few years of high school. Only being a sophomore he will have the opportunity to enhance his photography skills and hopefully pursue a career in college.

"This is something I definitely want to do in college or even more in the future. Even if it isn't my career in the end I will still do something with it," Quinn said.

Camille Oxley

(Courtesy Photo: Quinn McCune)

(Courtesy Photo: Quinn McCune)

(Courtesy Photo: Quinn McCune)